Dear Organization Leader,

Research shows, and as you know working with children and families each day, the development of social, emotional, cognitive, and academic skills are deeply intertwined, like the strands of a rope, and come together to form successful adults. Schools and community programs like yours have always taught skills like respect, getting along well with others and self-control. But there is now greater awareness and acceptance of the need to integrate the social and emotional, cognitive and academic aspects of learning.

Parents refer to social, emotional, cognitive, and academic skills as “life skills,” and play an integral role in their child’s development of these behaviors. Parents also understand that there are many reasons why life skills are beneficial, such as helping their child learn, being a good community member, preparing them for the workforce and countering the effects of peer pressure and bullying. Parents expect a dialogue with schools and communities about these skills, if framed as helping their child succeed academically and in the larger world.

The Developing Life Skills: Parent Perspectives Workshop was designed to help you facilitate an honest and productive conversation with parents, guardians and educators, eliciting their ideas and feedback on which life skills they see as most important and what it looks like to support children’s development of these skills in your local community.

By bringing parents’ voices to the table and validating their important role, you can best work together with families to support student success in and out of school.

Thank you for all you do.
Developing Life Skills: Parent Perspectives

Research Background

The Developing Life Skills: Parent Perspectives Workshop was informed by a new national study, Developing Life Skills in Children: A Road Map for Communicating with Parents. The study was conducted by Learning Heroes, a nonprofit organization that serves to inform and equip parents to be advocates for their children and partners in their education.

To help educators and community leaders understand how parents talk and feel about the development of life skills in their children, and the role they see for schools and after-school settings, Learning Heroes led a series of 10 focus groups and a nationwide survey of more than 2,000 parents who have children in K-8 public schools.

Learning Heroes found that when parents think about the skills and traits that are most important for their child to develop, more than nine in ten expect both home and school to play a role. There is opportunity for educators and community leaders to engage parents’ contributions about these teaching strategies and a range of research-based instructional practices that may seem new and different from those parents experienced growing up or that their children have been exposed to. However, there is also risk for parents to become confused, frustrated and to feel that these new approaches push the limits of what is appropriate for schools.

Developing Life Skills in Children: A Road Map for Communicating with Parents is meant to share insights with practitioners that can inform communications with families about these issues. The accompanying Developing Life Skills: Parent Perspectives Workshop Facilitator’s Guide is designed to help foster local conversations and acknowledge the important role of local context, community and culture.

Tips for an Effective Workshop with Parents

- Workshop activities and discussions may be most productive with 10-20 participants.
- The full workshop will take approximately 75-90 minutes, depending on the depth of group discussions. There is a suggested length of time for each section, but you may adjust depending on how the conversation unfolds. If you anticipate that more time will be needed, consider holding two or three separate workshops.
- The workshop is comprised of three activities, followed by a discussion for each. This framework is a guide, however, you can modify, add or omit questions depending on how much time you have and to best fit your local community and program context.
- Consider the time, day and location that is most convenient for the parents and guardians in your community.
- If access to transportation is an attendance factor, consider holding the workshop in a location that is within walking distance or accessible by public transportation.
- Depending on the time of day, serve refreshments and consider offering childcare at the workshop for parents with young children.
- Invite participants to sit around a table or in a circle to foster dialogue and a sense of community.
- Designate someone to take notes that you can reference later for any follow up with parents.
- Consider playing light music in the background as participants arrive to set a welcoming tone.

- Remember that parents are the experts of their child and have important insight to offer related to their own child’s social, emotional, and academic skills development.
- Provide positive reinforcement as parents share their ideas and encourage them to ask questions.
- This isn’t meant to be a ‘parenting class’ but rather a workshop for parents to learn and share ideas.

Before Your Workshop

Prepare the following:

- Copy of workshop framework for facilitator and note taker
- Pens for participants
- Tape to stick on the wall for Activity 1
- Photocopies of Activity 1 Gallery Walk words and/or worksheet
- Photocopies of Activity 2 worksheet
- Photocopies of Activity 3 worksheet
- Set up tables and chairs
- Notebook and large poster paper for note taker
- Light music playing as parents arrive (optional)
- Equipment to play the ‘How Learning Happens’ video (optional)

Workshop Framework: Introductions

Introductions (5-10 minutes)

- Introduce yourself, the note-taker and your respective roles during today’s workshop.
- Model the self-introduction first, and then invite participants to introduce themselves around the circle.

Please share your name; how many children you have (ages/grades); and name one emotion you feel about being here today – happy, curious, nervous, excited, stressed, etc.

Opening Discussion (10 minutes)

- We’re here today to talk about a topic that you may or may not have heard much about called developing life skills. Life skills are relevant to your child, your role as a parent and to [insert name of your school / organization here], because they impact how children learn. You are the expert on your child and know what motivates them as a learner, so we want your ideas and feedback about supporting their development of these life skills. To help guide the conversation, I have some questions and short activities to get your feedback about which life skills you think are important for your child.

1. When you think about life skills, which ones are the most important for your child to develop?
2. Why is it important that your child develops life skills?
3. How does your child develop life skills? Can life skills be taught?
4. When and how did you develop life skills?

Facilitator Note:

- Consider writing the discussion questions on large poster paper so participants can both read and hear the questions as a way to support different types of learners.
- The note taker may write participants’ responses on large poster paper for reference during Activity 1.

Workshop Framework: Activity 1

Gallery Walk of Life Skills (10 minutes)

- We’re going to get up and move now! Around the room, you will see 20 words or phrases that have been used to describe the life skills or qualities we’re talking about today.
- As you walk around the room:
  - Put a plus sign (+) on the words that are most important to you.
  - Put a minus sign (-) on the words that sound negative or not important to you.
  - Put a question mark (?) on the words that sound confusing.
- To get parents started, it may be helpful for the facilitator to walk around the room reading the words and phrases aloud before asking them to begin the Gallery Walk.

Facilitator Note: Alternative Activities –

a) Distribute copies of the worksheet for Activity 1. (List of life skills). Give participants 8-10 minutes to complete it independently before starting the discussion.

b) Distribute copies of the worksheet for Activity 1. Slowly read the words and phrases aloud. Participants write a plus, minus or question mark next to the words they wish to label.

c) If the families you’re working with have low-literacy levels, consider having the facilitator read the words aloud and having participants identify whether the skill is important to them by a raise of hands. (For confidentiality, you may ask participants to close their eyes).

Discussion (20 minutes)

1. Do you use any of the life skills words or phrases in everyday conversation?
2. Did any of the life skills words prompt a negative feeling or cause confusion or concern?
3. Think of the skills you marked with a plus (+) as most important. How do those compare to the skills that you listed as most important during our initial discussion? Are any missing?
4. We’ve been talking about a range of life skills for children. Whose job is it to teach life skills to your children? Who is primarily responsible? Who else is responsible?
5. What is your role as a parent when it comes to teaching life skills to your children?
6. What do you expect from the school, teachers, community leaders or program when it comes to teaching life skills to your children?
7. How do you know if your child has mastered, is progressing or needs help developing life skills? What are ways you can tell?
8. In a perfect world, what would happen in your child’s day to develop these skills? What would happen at home... at school... during the rest of their day?
9. What actually happens in your child’s day to develop these skills at home... at school... during the rest of their day?

Workshop Framework: Activity 2

Learning Scenarios: A look at what’s happening across the country (5-10 minutes)

- I have a few examples of what some schools around the country are doing to develop life skills in students. They are not being done in our district / city. I’d like to get your reaction to what these schools and communities are doing.
- Hand out the worksheet for Activity 2 (example program descriptions from around the country).
- Read through the examples for developing social and emotional skills. In the box, put a checkmark (√) next to the examples you would like for your child. Put an X next to the examples that you would not like for your child. Star the one that you would be most excited about for your child.

Facilitator Note: Alternative Activity –

a) I have a video example of how learning happens that shows what students need to be confident and ready to learn and grow in school and life. Let’s watch and then talk about some of the ideas in this video. Show ‘How Learning Happens’ video.

Discussion (10 minutes)

1. Overall, how are you feeling now about how children develop life skills based on these examples?
2. Are these the kinds of skills you want for your child? Why or why not?
3. What were you less interested in? What would you like to see more of?
4. Is there anything you have concerns about?
5. In your own words, what is the point of this type of learning?
Developing Life Skills: Parent Perspectives

Workshop Framework: Activity 3

Life Skills: What does it look like for your children? What does it look like in our community? (10 minutes)
- Next, we’re going to have a conversation about what developing life skills looks like for your children in our community.
- Take a moment to think about the behaviors you expect from a child who is developing life skills. What behaviors do you expect from your children?
- To help spark ideas, I’m passing around a list of behaviors. Put a star next to the ones you think are most important for your child. There is also space for you to add other behaviors that are important to you.
- Hand out the worksheet for Activity 3 (list of different behaviors related to life skills).

Discussion (10 minutes)
1. What behaviors did you mark as important? Why?
2. What additional behaviors did you add?
3. Do you expect different behaviors depending on whether children are in school, at home or in the community?
4. What are some of the challenges in developing these life skills?
5. How do you know when these behaviors are being supported or reinforced in school or community programs? What does it look like? (For example, how can you tell when children have been introduced to strategies to help work through conflicts with others?)
6. What ideas do you have on how these behaviors can be supported and reinforced at home and in our school / community? How can community settings and organizations provide support to parents?
Developing Life Skills: Parent Perspectives

Workshop Framework: Closing and Follow-up

Discussion (5 minutes)

1. After everything we’ve discussed today, on a scale of high, medium or low, what would you say is your level of interest in life skills development efforts at your child’s school or in our community? Why?

2. What do you think is the most important reason to include life skills development in a school or community setting? What is your biggest concern about including it in school?

3. What other ideas or questions do you have about how to support life skills development?

4. Optional: Here are some additional resources in our community. Share information about available programs or resources.

Thank you for your time and support of your child’s development at home!
