Section 4, the core of the library, includes tools designed to address specific components of job quality. Once organizations have determined their job quality priorities, they can turn to these tools to shift practices in the areas they have deemed most urgent, either in their own organizations or in the businesses with which they work.

Section 4, the core of the library, includes tools designed to help improve job quality. Once organizations have determined the areas in which they want to shift practices, they can use the tools to support their efforts to improve job quality in those areas.

We've organized tools in eight categories that reflect the four elements of the job quality framework. These categories include wages, benefits, scheduling, legal rights, equity and support, work environment, voice, and diversity and inclusion.

Seattle Race and Social Justice Initiative – Racial Equity Toolkit

Who’s It For: Employers, Economic Development, Investing and Lending, Policy, Worker Advocacy, Workforce Development

What’s It For: The Racial Equity Toolkit provides a process and set of questions designed to analyze how policies, initiatives, programs, and budget issues benefit or burden communities of color. The toolkit can be used to guide the development, implementation, and evaluation of strategies and solicit input from community members and staff. Although the toolkit includes some information specific to the City of Seattle, it can be adapted by a range of stakeholders within and beyond local governments interested in centering racial equity in job quality strategies.
Introduction

With support from Prudential Financial, the Aspen Institute Economic Opportunities Program is conducting this survey to learn about job quality perspectives and approaches across a range of organizations and businesses. Some of the questions this survey explores include:

- What aspects of job quality do you view as important?
- What types of strategies are you implementing to advance job quality with individual businesses you work with, within the labor market in general, or within your own organization?
- How have the health/economic crises of 2020 and the movement for racial justice influenced your perspectives and approaches related to job quality?
- What types of resources and information do you find useful in your work to advance job quality, and what else do you need?

We appreciate your willingness to contribute your experience related to opportunities for and challenges to improving job quality. Your responses provide important insights into how to support organizations to promote job quality and build an economy that works for everyone. Responses will be kept confidential. We will not attribute any of your responses to you or your organization unless we receive explicit permission from you to do so.

We expect this survey will take 20-25 minutes to complete, and there is no need to consult external information or resources. Please complete the survey by Tuesday, March 16.

Note: Please click "Next" on any page to ensure you’ve saved your responses. If you need to leave the survey and come back, please use the same device and browser.

We thank you, in advance, for your participation! If any questions or issues arise, please email Victoria.Prince@aspeninstitute.org.
